

William Sheldon Olmstead was well known as the cheerful motorman whose streetcar ran from Falconer to Ashville.

His was the first to leave the car barn before daylight.

When the Jamestown Street Railway converted to buses, Bill Olmstead quit. Here he is at the end of Jamestown's last streetcar run.
